

Diabetes Support Organisations

Information for Health Professionals

There are many organisations available to assist and support young people with diabetes and their families. The two major organisations in Australia are the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation (JDRF) and Diabetes Australia.

It is important that all health professionals are aware of the support organisations available to young people with diabetes and their families and to ensure this information is given to them.

Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation (JDRF)

JDRF is a world-wide non-profit health organisation and registered charity which is dedicated to funding basic and applied medical research to find a cure for diabetes and to prevent diabetes complications. In addition, the organisation provides information, education and advocacy on Type 1 diabetes for children, adolescents, their families, health professionals, government and the wider community.

JDRF provides practical support to families through its national volunteer network.

To join JDRF a membership form must be completed. The first six months membership is free for newly diagnosed young people and their families.

Further information can be obtained by contacting 1300 363 126 or by visiting their website www.jdrf.org.au.

Diabetes Australia (DA)

Diabetes Australia Limited (DA) is a federation of 12 major diabetes organisations, comprising 8 State and Territory Associations of Diabetes Australia, as well as the Australian Diabetes Society, the Australian Diabetes Educators Association, the Kellion Diabetes Foundation and the Diabetes Research Foundation-Western Australia.

DA aims to:
